

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A vehicle-installed relay box is for installing a relay used for controlling power supply to a load in a vehicle-installed system provided with different specifications, the relay being configured to different specifications using one or more relay elements in combination in accordance with one type of specification selected from among the different specifications of the vehicle-installed system. The vehicle-installed relay box includes: a plurality of terminals; an installation socket configured to install the relay element; and a wiring configured to connect the relay element installed in the installation socket and the terminals. The installation socket is further configured to be installed a different relay element in accordance with the selected type of specification from among the different specifications of the vehicle-installed system.